Longren to Make Parts For Boeing

The Boeing Airplane company completed negotiations with Longren Aircraft, Torrance, for the supply of major structure of the new USAF jet tanker, KC-135 and the newest jet transport, model 707.

Longren has been a structural parts supplier to Boeing for many years. The assignment of producing structural assemblies for the Seattle Company is a result of the past years of successful production of airborne parts and the new expansion facilities being built by Longren at the Torrance Airport.

Longren Aircraft will specialize in assembly structures with plant No. 1 of 41,000 sq. ft. devoted to fabrication and plant No. 2, of 50,000 sq. ft., employed for parts processing and assembly work.

The initial order, signed by Boeing January 30 calls for 2-584 wing spars for the new airplane with a contract total of more than $300,000. Additional orders will follow as commercial orders and new military orders for this large Jet Airplane develop.

HERE TO DISCUSS FREE $190,000 MUSEUM

Douglas Brown, retired Shell Beach mining engineer, visited Torrance Monday to look over a spot on the new civic center offered by the city for his mineral, crystal and gem museum. Brown is looking around for a city which will appreciate the collection. He'll also build the museum. He has also had offers from Palm Springs and Apple Valley. So far he has not committed himself. The recreational facilities at this area are open to all age levels. All adults interested in a horseshoe tournament, should contact Jones any Saturday between the hours of 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. before March 10.
